Dean's Address on Independence Day Celebration

The Independence Day celebration at PSSEMR School witnessed a thought-provoking and inspiring address by the esteemed Dean, who shared valuable insights and encouraged the students and faculty members to reflect on their roles as responsible citizens and custodians of the nation's heritage

The Dean commenced his address by shedding light on the life and contributions of Swami Sharddhananda, an eminent Arya Samaj sannyasi and a prominent Indian Independence activist. Swami Sharddhananda's dedicated efforts in propagating the teachings of Dayananda Saraswati were highlighted, particularly his instrumental role in establishing educational institutions such as the Gurukul Kangri University. The Dean emphasized Swami Sharddhananda's involvement in the Sangathan movement, which aimed at consolidating and organizing the nation.

Drawing a powerful analogy, the Dean urged the gathering to consider adopting a tree as a symbol of adopting an unsung hero. He stressed the importance of researching and delving into the lives of these unsung heroes, who may have gone unnoticed but have made remarkable contributions to society and the nation. The Dean encouraged students to share their findings with others, fostering a sense of appreciation and respect for these often-overlooked figures.

The Dean articulated the importance of exploring the stories of various unsung heroes, as a collective understanding of their contributions forms an integral part of the nation's history and identity. He emphasized the role of education in shaping informed and responsible citizens, challenging the students to read more extensively about these lesser-known figures and disseminate their knowledge.

The Dean, emphasized the significance of this concept in understanding and acknowledging the courage, dedication, and sacrifices made by the police and armed forces. He highlighted a recent incident in Haryana's Nuh district, where the police and army played a crucial role in maintaining law and order during a period of violence. The Dean praised their efforts and highlighted their commitment to upholding peace and security.

The Dean's address took a reflective turn as he touched upon the lingering influence of colonization in contemporary society. He called for a collective effort to become "decolonized," shedding the remnants of Western influence and promoting a deeper appreciation for India's rich cultural heritage. The Dean passionately urged the students to challenge the prevalent mindset that leans toward Westernization and, instead, focus on embracing and celebrating their own heritage.

In conclusion, the Dean's address resonated with the audience, prompting them to reflect on the lives of unsung heroes, embrace the spirit of 'Kshatra Budhi,' and actively participate in reshaping the nation's narrative. The call to become responsible citizens and advocates for decolonization struck a chord with both students and faculty members, inspiring a renewed commitment to preserving India's unique identity and contributing to its growth and progress.
